The Catalogue Grid

Filter count doesn't track catalogue size the way you'd expect — Myntra has ten times Namshi's SKUs but the shallowest filter panel of the four. It bets on brand depth instead of attribute filtering.

NAMSHI, 21,649 results, 15 filters (Delivery Type, Dress Style, Pattern)

SHEIN, 17 filters, with broader attribute-level filtering

CENTREPOINT, 2,828 products, 15 filters (Style, Occasion, Material, Discount Range)

MYNTRA, 231,172 items, only 9 filters — depth comes from 3,000+ brands instead of attributes

The Product Page

The sampled PDPs emphasize different conversion levers: discount, trust/payment, urgency and social proof.

NAMSHI, Two countdown timers at once — delivery window AND flash-sale plus a PREMIUM badge

SHEIN, Leads with social proof: star rating and comment count sit directly under the title, before price

CENTREPOINT, Stacks urgency ("18 Views in last 24 hours") with loyalty points (Shukrans) and Tabby installments

MYNTRA, Discount-led: MRP struck through, 78% OFF badge, size chart link before size selection

RECOMMENDATIONS

01 Fix the review-volume gap, not the review feature.

In our sampled Centrepoint PDP, the review function was present but had zero reviews. Recommend a post-purchase review nudge through email or app notifications, with prompts focused on fit, size and product quality to build useful customer feedback over time.

Benchmark signal: SHEIN's visible review/fit-consensus layer

02 Surface delivery promises earlier.

Centrepoint already communicates estimated delivery on the PDP, such as "Get it Tomorrow" or a specific delivery date. Test bringing this signal onto the PLP through badges such as "Get it Tomorrow" or "Express Delivery" so customers can factor delivery into their product choice before opening the PDP.

Benchmark signal: Namshi's delivery visibility + Centrepoint's existing PDP capability

03 Model details for better fit visualization

Surface model height, size worn and fit information closer to the size selector, supported by a clear size guide and garment measurements. This can give customers more confidence in how the product may fit before purchasing.
